

Violent Counter-Attack Fails To Stop Russians Advancing upon Kharkov

Red Armies Steadily Encircling Germans on 60
Mile Front in Spite of Furious Resistance

By HENRY C. CASSIDY
MOSCOW, May 18 (AP)—The Russian armies of the Ukraine were reported advancing steadily tonight along a great arc about Kharkov, their left wing approaching Krasnodar sixty miles to the southwest and their right closing in on Kharkov itself.

The bloodiest and most violent of German counter-thrusts—with tanks pulling armored trailers of infantrymen headlong into the Soviet line and parachutists dropping in groups numbering as high as 120—were said by Russian dispatches to have failed to check Marshal Semyon Timoshenko's progress.

All Out Nazi Drive

Every Soviet account indicated that the German command was hurling every weapon of its explosive armory into the supreme defensive effort.

As to the Crimea, the mid-day Soviet communiqué reported that Russian troops yet held to their positions in Kerch, on the peninsula of that name, in dogged resistance against locally superior forces.

The German high command conceded a "desperate" Soviet resistance on the Kerch peninsula, but claimed that the defenders there were "facing annihilation."

On the Kharkov front, an afternoon announcement from Berlin asserted that 324 Russian tanks had been destroyed since May 12. A number of successful German counter-attacks, one of which was said to have relieved an encircled German base, were likewise claimed.

Russians Advancing

In London, a British military commentator, summing up the general situation, stated that Timoshenko's left wing already rested on Krasnodar, and that the Russian advance thus was continuing on a 100-mile arc, the northern end of which was at the town of Volchansk, thirty miles northeast of Kharkov.

This advance, he added, involved double the scope of operations as of a few days ago and by reason of this and German counter-attacks had been slowed down in some places. Nowhere, however, had it been halted, he said.

Of Crimea, he declared the Nazis now were in substantially complete

OPA Rules in Cases of Cards for Supplemental Allotments

BALTIMORE, May 18 (AP)—The OPA ruled today that local rationing boards should not consider applications for supplemental gasoline allotments until the applicant has used at least seventy per cent of his original ration.

Taking cognizance of reports that some filling-station operators had been selling only to "regular customers," the Office of Price Administration also held that there must be no discrimination among customers lawfully entitled to acquire gasoline.

More than 40,000 motorists have obtained supplemental ration applications for more gasoline than provided on their original ration card and some of them, the OPA said, had tried to get more gasoline before using any of their first allotment.

These motorists, the OPA said, must use seventy per cent of their original ration before they can obtain a supplemental card. Local board will pass on supplemental applications. Special consideration will be given motorists away from home when their ration is exhausted.

Rival Pennsylvania Candidates End Campaigns for Major State Offices

PHILADELPHIA, May 18 (AP)—In state government as well as the army, mixed personalities are to a decision of Pennsylvania's war-minded voters tonight a "gloves-off" Republican primary fight and a sharp three-cornered Democratic contest. All factions forecast a light vote tomorrow's state-wide balloting.

Japanese Driven Away from West Bank of Salween

Chinese Bar Further Eastward Advance on the Burma Road

By The Associated Press

CHUNGKING, May 18—The west bank of the broad, turbulent and mountain-walled Salween barring the eastward advance of the Japanese up the Burma Road has been cleared of the enemy and their columns have been wiped out or driven back to Lunglei, the Chinese announced today.

Some 250 miles to the north, however, extremely heavy fighting was reported in progress as reinforced Japanese attacked from three directions in an apparent effort to drive up from Thailand between the mighty Salween and Mekong to flank the Salween defences.

The Japanese reverse along the Salween was announced after fierce artillery fire had been exchanged for days across the formidable barrier.

Japs Forced Back

Chinese reinforcements were flung across the stream, and in a bitter struggle the main Japanese forces were thrust back all along the way to Lunglei, twenty miles from the river, and remnants which clung to positions at Mailapou and Hungmushu were wiped out. (These places, not shown on available maps in New York, apparently were where the Japanese reached the river.)

As a result, said the Chinese, Pao-shan, fifty-five miles beyond the Salween by the winding Burma Road and the next Japanese objective in that theater, is no longer menaced by the northward movement from Lunglei.

The statement, an official report to some rationing officials who contended any pleasure use of ration gasoline by "B" card holders was illegal, was designed to "clear up misunderstandings which have arisen over this point," Henderson said.

Apparently, too, the Japanese were pushing columns in from the two sides, along the Mekong to the east and across the Salween from the west.

U. S. and Panama To Guard Canal For the Duration

Use of Airfields and Gun Emplacements Given to
This Country

By WILLIAM R. SPEAR

WASHINGTON, May 18 (AP)—A pact between the United States and Panama today clinched the right of this country to use airfields and big gun emplacements planted throughout Panama to guard the Canal zone.

The agreement signed in Panama by Edwin C. Wilson, United States ambassador, and Octavio Fabrega, Panamanian foreign minister, formalizes the permission to occupy the defense areas which was granted last year by former President Arnulfo Arias, now in exile, and settles other problems in the relations of the two countries.

Definite Limit Set

Twice in the comprehensive agreement the stipulation is made that United States occupancy of the areas "shall terminate one year after the date on which the definitive treaty of peace which brings about the end of the present war shall have entered into effect" but that "within the period the two governments believe that, in spite of the cessation of hostilities, a state of international insecurity continues to exist which makes vitally necessary the continuation of the use of any of the said defense bases or areas, the two governments shall again enter into mutual consultation and shall conclude the new agreement which the circumstances require."

An exchange of notes at the same time provided for liquidation of Panama's indebtedness arising from construction of the strategic Rio Hato-Chorrero highway, withdrawal of the Panama Railroad Company from real estate operations in Panama and Colon and delivery to Panama of water works and sewer systems within Panamanian territory.

Now Up to Congress

These matters will be subject to the approval of Congress, the State department said, but the agreement on the defense bases provided that it should take effect when approved by the national executive power and the national assembly of Panama.

The bases are located at various points in Panamanian territory beyond the ten-mile-wide canal zone strip. Airfields have been established both on the coast and in the interior, the largest being the Rio Hato air base about eighty miles southwest of the canal. Other areas are used for gun emplacements, airplane detector stations and bombing ranges.

Defense Forces Ready

Pilots and crews are constantly on the alert, ready for an instant takeoff to repel any attack. The bases also have their own defense (Continued on Page 2, Col. 2)

WASHINGTON, May 18 (AP)—Holders of "B" gasoline ration cards who manage to save some gasoline from their business needs may use the rest for pleasure trips "or any purpose they desire," Price Administrator Leon Henderson ruled today.

The statement, an official report to some rationing officials who contended any pleasure use of ration gasoline by "B" card holders was illegal, was designed to "clear up misunderstandings which have arisen over this point," Henderson said.

If it should become necessary to check the use to which "X" (unrestricted) card holders make of their cars by spot inspections along the highways, such checking will be done by inspectors from OPA (Continued on Page 2, Col. 2)

Soldier Is Stowaway On Troop Transport

AEF HEADQUARTERS, NORTH-
ERN IRELAND, May 18 (AP)—There was a stowaway aboard with the newly arrived contingent of American troops—private George F. Dulay, Jr., 29, of Chelsea, Mass.

Husky American police were guarding the docks at an eastern United States port when the troops embarked, so he got most of his gear, went aboard and "grabbed myself a bunk."

He was discovered after the convoy was well out to sea.

Now he is under technical arrest in northern Ireland but it is likely that he will be absorbed in a military police unit. He served one three-year hitch in the army before he was drafted.

"Hell," he said, "I wanted action and that was the best way I could figure out to get it quick."

By JOHN A. MOROSO III

A NORTHERN IRELAND PORT, May 18 (AP)—I have just crossed the Atlantic with a huge American convoy that outfoxed enemy submarines all the way.

"We had to 'push the periscopes down,' almost all the way of our 2,400-mile voyage of daring and skill.

The destroyers and planes delivered thunderous depth charge attacks.

In convoy work the job is to get the troopers through. You don't have time to investigate attacks or run the enemy down. You blast him when you think he is near and keep sailing.

The vicious explosions left no doubt in our minds that some more strangers would have breakfast in hell. I was five miles away but our ship shivered sharply from the blasts.

No Torpedoes Fired

No torpedo was fired at us. Neither were we bombed by planes although our eager gunners prayed for an attack as they crouched by their guns night and day.

This eagerness was one of the cheering things during the voyage. Our Yankee kids have the utmost confidence in their ability to knock down planes.

So thousands and thousands of cheering Yankee soldiers—mechanized men of America's new world-wide army—have arrived here after their dangerous and fog-riden journey.

With these jaunty lads came the millions of dollars worth of battle tools—ready for instant use.

Largest U. S. Convoy

The value of our convoy and its ultimate effect on the war are like the operational details of our trip—military secrets. But I am allowed to say that it was the largest yet to arrive here.

The soldiers of this war are better equipped and prepared than the lads who rushed overseas in the last conflict.

Prime Minister John Curtin himself declared that "although I have no fear of the results," Australians might soon be meeting "the shock of war upon their own soil."

Addressing the Royal Empire Society at Sydney, Curtin at the same time said he had never been able to understand the controversy stirred by his appeal for aid to President Roosevelt after the fall of Malaya and Singapore.

They have a new type of helmet that affords more protection. Their rifles shoot harder and faster. Their food is more plentiful and scientifically planned.

They are sturdier, healthier, and as cheerful as kids at a circus. Some grew homesick at times. Others got seasick, but all carried on.

One exuberant gang nicknamed their freighter "Berlin Express."

By C. YATES McDANIEL

ALLIED HEADQUARTERS, AUSTRALIA, May 18 (AP)—Emphasizing anew Australia's grave peril, Commonwealth leaders today picture the allied victory in the Coral Sea as only a delaying action against a Japanese force for already reassembling a more powerful invasion force for another thrust in this direction.

Prime Minister John Curtin himself declared that "although I have no fear of the results," Australians might soon be meeting "the shock of war upon their own soil."

Addressing the Royal Empire Society at Sydney, Curtin at the same time said he had never been able to understand the controversy stirred by his appeal for aid to President Roosevelt after the fall of Malaya and Singapore.

Curtin added he had been forced to "appeal directly to the United States because of the circumstances in which Britain was placed."

German Cruiser Prinz Eugen Hit By 2 Torpedoes

Powerful Warships Believed Out of Service for Long Period

By DREW MIDDLETON

LONDON, May 18 (AP)—The powerful 10,000-ton German cruiser Prinz Eugen was regarded tonight as knocked out of the vital battle of the Atlantic perhaps for three months by the gaping wounds of two or more aerial torpedoes driven home before dusk last night by an RAF fighter-bomber squadron which caught her slipping along the Norwegian coast.

Reporting that the aerial striking force reached Norwegian waters while it still was light, the air ministry news service said "the attack was pressed home in the teeth of strenuous opposition from a large force of enemy fighters and heavy anti-aircraft fire from ships."

German Ship Afire

One attacking pilot said he saw a "great pillar of dirty black smoke" rise from the superstructure of the cruiser after he sent his torpedo home. There were two large explosions 15 seconds apart, the news service reported. Another pilot saw a sheet of flame leap up from the cruiser after he attacked and added that he saw other torpedoes "running well toward the ship."

Besides torpedoing the Prinz Eugen, the British planes peppered four escorting German destroyers with cannon and machine gun fire, an admiralty account said.

300 Miles from Scotland

The attack was placed off Lister Fjord, sixty miles south of Stavanger and little more than 300 miles air line from northwestern Scotland.

Even at the time of the attack which put her on the Nazi navy's temporary useless list alongside the heavily damaged battleships Scharnhorst and Gneisenau, the Prinz Eugen was limping back to a home port from Trondheim for repair of previous damage, the admiralty said.

The admiralty gave a indication of the intensity of the attack in its announcement that Beaufort torpedo-carrying bombers, Hudson bombers, Blenheim bombers and Beau fighters took part.

Great Ships Bombed

While the Beauforts roared in close to loose their torpedoes, fighter planes battled a swarm of Nazi planes and the other bombers strafed the decks of the Prinz Eugen's four escorting destroyers with cannon and machine gun fire, a communiqué said.

It reported five German ME-109 fighter planes shot down and said the attack cost nine British planes.

The Berlin broadcast said between thirty and fifty British planes attacked and twenty-nine, or possibly more than half of the British formation, were shot down—seven fighters and twenty-two bombers.

The temporary loss of the Prinz Eugen and the intensified RAF "death watch" on Trondheim Fjord was believed by informed sources to reduce the possibility of an outright attack on the Arctic supply lane to Russia by the Germans' Trondheim squadron.

Nazis Strength Reduced

This consists now of but three heavy warships, the powerful battleship Tirpitz, sister-ship of the sunken Bismarck, the pocket battleship Admiral Scheer, and the 10,000-ton heavy cruiser Admiral Hipper, sister-ship to the Prinz Eugen.

The Prinz Eugen, which made the daring dash through the mist of the English channel last February with the Scharnhorst and Gneisenau, was reported by the admiralty as a result of a torpedo attack by the British submarine Trident.

Elsewhere along the aerial battle-front of Western Europe, the RAF followed up night attacks with a two-hour pre-dawn pounding of targets from Dunkerque to Boulogne and struck repeatedly across the channel during the day.

Alleged Drinking Draftees Reprimanded

BALTIMORE, May 18 (AP)—United States Commissioner James K. Cullen today reprimanded, then released, four Hagerstown men who had been arrested Friday and charged with reporting for induction into the army in an intoxicated condition.

Commissioner Cullen warned that persons reporting for induction in an intoxicated condition were subject to punishment for violating the selective service act.

The men apologized and asserted they had no intention of trying to evade or delay their military service.

INTERPRETING THE WAR NEWS

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON
Associated Press Staff Writer

A grim possibility that his promised "annihilation" offensive in Russia will turn into a Nazi route on a wide front south of Kharkov confronts Herr Hitler. For seven days he has been outgassed and outfought by Russian armies he once told his people he had destroyed.

The exact contour of the 100-mile wide Russian front around the Kharkov Bastion of German communications is not clear. Russian seizure of Krasnograd junction, three miles west-southwest of Kharkov, is imminent, according to Moscow and London. Its fall would put Red forces within three score miles of Dnipropetrovsk, site of the rail bridge upon which main supply lines of German forces in a rapidly developing Stalino-Taganrog pocket depended. To exploit fully the startling Red success, the Russian commander has already gone far to nullify German victories on Kerch peninsula. Its complete capture would be all but meaningless to Hitler unless he promptly halts the forward surge of Timoshenko in the Krasnograd-Lozovaya breakthrough.

The Russian leader, not Hitler, seems to have been the one to achieve the incalculable advantage of surprise.

Finance Corporation. Congressional action necessarily would await the agencies' conclusions.

At the time of the original warnings of an eastern oil shortage last spring Petroleum Coordinator Ickes and the large oil companies proposed an $80,000,000 "national defense pipeline" to run 1,800 miles from the Sea of Azov coast to the east coast capable of delivering 600,000 barrels a day.

With Krasnograd under Russian gunfire, London observers intimate it is already in Russian hands, the vital German communication link east of the Dnieper river at the stream's great eastern bend would be broken. Even Kremenchuk, the next major river crossing northward and 80 miles farther west, would be threatened.

South of Krasnograd, the Russians are already reported astride one rail line to Stalino at Lozovaya junction and threatening the direct Stalino-Dnipropetrovsk and Mariupol connections on both sides of Stalino. It is that is true the whole southern mainland flank of the German front to the Sea of Azov coast, from which the main attack on the Caucasus was to be launched, is in deadly peril.

Position Not Clear

So far as the breach in the Nazi lines south of Kharkov can be traced on the maps, it seems to represent a huge bulge with a front of fifty-mile width or more from Krasnograd to Lozovaya bearing down on Dnipropetrovsk from the east and northeast. It is far from clear yet, however, whether Marshal Timoshenko's objective is confined to reaching the Dnieper at the Dnipropetrovsk crossing.

command of the Kerch peninsula, the Russians holding only isolated positions. Here he said, German casualties had been very high.

Timoshenko's march on Kharkov appeared on the basis of Russian field reports to be proceeding over the most reckless German opposition of the war.

The military correspondent of the official Communist newspaper Pravda thus illustrated:

"The Germans now attempt by every means to stem our offensive. In one comparatively narrow sector, they sent 150 tanks with armored trailers carrying troops in order to break through to one of their surrounded garrisons.

"These tanks wedged into our lines but were stopped and about half of them were destroyed. Our units effectively repulsed enemy tank counter-attacks. At first, the Germans sent out eighteen tanks followed by infantry. During the day the Fascists counter-attacked fifteen times, putting into action more and more tanks each time with the only result that they lost forty-three machines without gaining any success."

"German aviation is very active but is unable to attain superiority. The Fascists attempted to land parties 120, fifty and thirty strong were recorded. Two of these parties were annihilated in the air before they reached ground."

Soviet sources also declared that German reserves only recently brought up from western Europe were becoming numerous among Nazi captives.

Regional and state office," the Office of Price Administration added.

The latter statement was interpreted by OPA spokesmen as a precaution against too much "nonsense" by volunteer and unauthorized investigators.

At the same time, Henderson announced that local ration boards throughout the eastern ration area would be relied upon to recheck applications for "X" and "B-3" cards to determine whether any had received them without justification.

Commissioner Cullen warned that persons reporting for induction in an intoxicated condition were subject to punishment for violating the selective service act.

The men apologized and asserted they had no intention of trying to evade or delay their military service.

They were listed as Glen W. Buhman, 33; Benjamin G. Smith, 32; Leonard F. Gearhart, 30, and Hubert W. Hulson, 33.

O'Conor Praises Labor in Address At Hagerstown

Tells Convention No Time Is Being Lost in Maryland War Contracts

By ALTON L. BLAKESLEE

HAGERSTOWN, Md., May 18 (AP)—Calls for greater unity in the House of Labor, and protection of labor's rights during war were presented today at opening sessions of the thirty-seventh annual Maryland and District of Columbia federation of labor convention.

At the same time, the 325 delegates representing 350,000 workers and 200 unions were told by Governor O'Conor that, "no time, thanks to you, is being lost in Maryland war contracts."

By AMY PORTER

NEW YORK, May 18 (AP)—Madeline Webb wept today and could not stop weeping as Murray Hirsch, a friend, testified that she had a part in the planning and in the aftermath of the robbery-slaying of Mrs. Susan Flora Reich, 52-year-old Polish refugee.

The 28-year-old model is accused along with Eli Shonbrun, the man the state calls her lover, and John D. Cullen, a convicted thief, of first degree murder in the strangling of Mrs. Reich on March 4.

By C. L. HIRSCH

Hirsch, uncle of Shonbrun and himself a convicted thief under indictment for the slaying, calmly related a story of crime so cheap that he said, its perpetrators even stole the ten-cents' worth of adhesive tape with which the victim's mouth was gagged.

Madeline, freshly dressed in a new black and white frock and with her dark hair smoothed down in a sleek style, lost all self-control when Hirsch told of meeting her a few blocks from the hotel Sutton, where the crime was committed.

"Madeline said she was very nervous," Hirsch testified. "She said the minute the woman arrived (at the hotel suite) they grabbed her, and she heard the woman yell as she left the door."

By C. L. HIRSCH

"Oh, oh," Madeline moaned, rocking back and forth in her courtroom chair, holding her head in her hands, following a keynote address by Joseph P. McCurdy, of Baltimore, federation president, ascertained "we must fight to protect our free democratic organizations while fighting to crush the Axis."

By C. L. HIRSCH

"I'm not dwelt upon his past, shot to the core with work on many fronts, and for many embattled causes, but he talked of the other worlds to conquer. He did not tell how The News and Observer under his direction grew from a circulation fewer than 2,000 to more than 70,000 in a city of 50,000 people."

There was no talk of old battles or old foes. He bore neither scars nor malice. His eyes were on tomorrow.

He wore the invariable black tie and the white shirt and the black cord around his neck which held his small watch. His big, black planter's hat rested on a nearby table. His suit was a snappy gray.

"Man must always be an optimist," he said. "It is the only happy life."

"A pessimist gets knocked down every day; an optimist only once."

By C. L. HIRSCH

"She said there was a man working in the hall with a vacuum cleaner, making a lot of noise, and also that the radio was going full blast, but she left very calmly, she said, and didn't think she attracted any attention."

Shonbrun suddenly stormed at the witness:

"You'll never sleep again, Murphy."

But Hirsch's calm-voiced testimony went on and on, while Madeline brushed tears from her eyes.

By C. L. HIRSCH

"I know," he said, at another point, "there are people sitting in pews in our churches who don't belong there, but the church will not throw them out."

He also knew that there are men in the labor movement who do not belong there. But our answer to that is: Let the law enforcement agencies step in, try them, and if they put them in jail we will not worry about it.

Major General Eugene Rebold, chief of the army engineer corps, testified today in support of the project. He told the committee that the pipeline could be completed within six months if materials could be obtained "reasonably promptly."

Governor O'Conor said "labor's effective and growing patriotism will place the American people forever in the debt of organized labor," and that without the aid of your production soldiers, democracy's cause is doomed."

By C. L. HIRSCH

He said labor leaders, both AFL and CIO, showed "exceptional spirit" in forming the Maryland victory loan board, and termed the board, "An influence against any stoppage of necessary work."

He testified to accompanying Cullen that morning on a shopping trip for wire and scissors and adhesive tape—the tools which the state claims were used in gagging and binding up Mrs. Reich. Cullen "palmed the tape," Hirsch said, but "couldn't get away without paying" for twenty-nine cents worth of wire and a ten-cent pair of scissors.

He related several conversations which he said occurred on the day of the murder and on the two preceding days, in which the three defendants made careful plans concerning Mrs. Reich's one o'clock appointment at the Sutton.

The state claims the appointment was made by Miss Webb, on the pretext of inviting Mrs. Reich to lunch to meet her new husband, "Ted Leopold."

By C. L. HIRSCH

Opening the three-day convention this morning, McCurdy said the federation had pledged, "our love, devotion, and even our lives in this hour of emergency," and declared men in the armed forces must be assured of coming back to work under decent conditions and not slave conditions.

By C. L. HIRSCH

"We must not lose sight of the gains labor has made," he continued, "and if any concessions are necessary for successful prosecution of the war, those concessions must be only temporary."

By C. L. HIRSCH

McCurdy opened convention this morning, McCurdy said the federation had pledged, "our love, devotion, and even our lives in this hour of emergency," and declared men in the armed forces must be assured of coming back to work under decent conditions and not slave conditions.

School Children Need Discipline During Wartime

Civilians As Well As Soldiers Need To Learn
To Obey

By GARRY C. MYRS, PH.D.
As I said yesterday, civilians as well as soldiers need to learn discipline in order to seek victory for us and our allies in this war. Every citizen needs to learn to obey those entrusted with authority, especially in terms of emergencies as in case of air raids. Let the home and school put more emphasis on useful discipline. Let children have more training in obedience.

Frequent lack of obedience during an air raid drill makes it apparent that children need more training in obedience at school as well as at home. In this column during peacetime, I pleaded for more home-obedience of children and often discussed effective ways of obtaining it. Now a word about obedience at school.

Atmosphere Important
1. Let every teacher strive faithfully to cultivate a comfortable learning atmosphere in the classroom in which each individual will be able to learn best and be respected as a worthy person.

2. If her go on striving to cultivate self-discipline in her children let them remember that they also will feel in order to grow in self-discipline, some discipline from without; that they will need to lead to respect and obey constituted authority. I hope her principal stands back of her in this.

Let the teacher exercise her children from the first grade on in obedience to some rules for order. It is helpful if the children will decide on these rules. The teacher, however, must be responsible for having the rules carried out.

4. Let the children at school learn all through their school life to be in their places and to be quiet at certain stated times and to do and not to do certain clearly defined things then. The class in the first, fourth or tenth grade which takes several minutes to quiet down following recess or a signal for serious work is poorly disciplined. But the well-trained group can shift rather promptly from fun or free activity to serious work to be done by the entire group. School children not so disciplined are ill-prepared for air raid drills.

5. Some while ago I proposed that school children at all age levels be given daily formal setting up exercises (calisthenics) much like those of the army and navy as a means to health and ruggedness.
Would not these exercises at school also contribute much to effective discipline?

Solving Parent Problems

Q. What punishment do you suggest to cure my eleven-year-old boy of nail biting?

A. None at all; treat him as a

Taxation That Hits a Large Group Unfairly

A CONTRIBUTOR to the Baltimore Sun stresses a point which has been noted several times in this department and to which it is hoped the legislators at Washington who are framing new taxes will give sympathetic attention.

The contributor, Frederick Arnold Kummer, of Baltimore, believes that some of the proposals to tax those who are reaping the benefits of high wartime earnings as one of the means of avoiding inflation are manifestly unfair. This is because, in order to get at those higher earnings, the proposals also embrace millions of hard-pressed workers who have not only failed to receive such benefits but who, on the contrary, are obliged to bear hardships and adversity by reason of static incomes and the rising cost of living.

"Thus, to tax a fortunate labor group that has benefited enormously by high wages due to the war," Kummer says, "it is proposed to reach even deeper into the pockets of a much larger but less fortunate group of white-collar workers who have not benefited at all, but, on the contrary, are having a desperate struggle to meet increased costs of living. The injustice of this is manifest."

"To attempt to recover swollen wages from war workers by taxing five times as many stragglers in less fortunate fields," Kummer further says, "is like shooting four innocent victims in order to be sure of bagging the guilty fifth . . . The white-collar workers are always the goats, in any system of taxation, being unorganized. In this case, our political overlords might do well not to squeeze the backbone of the nation too far lest it retaliate as it has in the past—at the polls."

The last-named observation is something to be expected this fall and, from the viewpoint of those who are not overly enthusiastic about the manner in which the new taxes are being contemplated, it is not an unwelcome prospect.

The Sun contributor has a suggestion for accomplishing the result desired of getting at war boom inflation, this being that the war workers be paid part of their high wages in bonds, negotiable only after the war. "Such enforced savings," he says, "would provide the working man, notoriously improvident, with an invaluable cushion against possible wartime depression."

That might help. Another way, as herefore noted in this newspaper, would be to avoid the double dose for the existing lowest bracket income taxpayers as has been proposed by Col. F. Stam, the expert adviser of the Joint Congressional Committee on Internal Revenue.

All workers, whether their incomes have been boosted by war boom industry, or whether they are wedged between static incomes and living costs, patriotically want to share in the added war burden. But it is only fair that the burden be shared equally by all of them.

Good Strategy Indicated By the Coastal Losses

THE BOLDNESS of the German submarine commanders who are operating along the Atlantic coast was demonstrated when one of them disabled a British freighter within plain view of the Florida coast. Two American vessels were attacked in the same area. The attacks were in broad daylight. Almost simultaneously, two freighters were sunk by submarine action in the St. Lawrence river in Canada.

American coastal ship lanes have been drawn in as far as possible in an effort to bring German submarines within the patrol area which the Atlantic sea frontier command has established. But the losses continue. How many submarines have been destroyed is not known, but apparently not enough to discourage the Germans. In fact, the bold daylight prowling just offshore seems to reflect contempt for the American defense.

The navy's successful convoy operations across the North Atlantic explain the shortage of Atlantic fleet ships for the coastal patrol. The enormous navy problem in the Pacific explains why the Pacific fleet must be kept at full strength. This leaves the coast to take the blow, which, seemingly, it must continue to do until ships and planes are available for an effective defense.

The kernel of the whole matter seems to be that it is more important to keep the North Atlantic route open for continuation of the needed war supplies for Murmansk and for Britain than to protect the southern coastal waters. That is to say, we can afford to lose in the southern coastal waters but cannot afford to lose in the North Atlantic. Disposal of American armed might where it will do the most good is not only good strategy but it is the only course to pursue.

A Real Reminder That This Is War

ANOTHER SHARP REMINDER that this war business in which we are engaged is an all-out affair is given in the fact that it is beginning to hit the American breakfast. And when you hit breakfast you are really hitting something in this country.

Uncle Sam apparently is finding it necessary to rule over the American breakfast table with a silver hand. There was a time when Uncle might have ruled with an iron hand, but iron is out for the duration of the war.

Anyway, Uncle took action to cut down coffee consumption by twenty-five per cent and tea consumption by fifty per cent. There are people who drink tea for breakfast. Now he has ordered a reduction in cocoa processing by thirty per cent, which will have its effect on another breakfast beverage. Sugar already has been rationed, as every school teacher knows.

There is, of course, nothing arbitrary or capricious about Uncle Sam's attitude in this matter. It happens that the beverages and sugar come in large degree from faraway lands and are affected by lack of cargo space and the marauding of the Nazi undersea boats.

The government did not reduce breakfast beverages to make people conscious of the war early in the morning—it knows the newspaper takes care of that. But perhaps it is all to the good that people feel the actual impact of war on their breakfast dishes. It serves to make them more determined to have the war fought to victory so that domination of the breakfast table by governmental ukase may be brought to a swift end.

The Automobile and Our Economy

WE CONTINUE to hear discussions in Washington of the possibility that private automobiles may be seized by the government. But each time the proposal is advanced, it is laid aside. Pressing need of the cars for essential military service would be the reason for any such step, but one wonders why it is broached only to be soft-pedaled.

An explanation for that may be found in an observation made by the Ohio State Journal, which points out that there must be consideration of the fact that the United States has for twenty-five years been building its whole economy around the automobile.

"What must be determined, therefore, is whether to take from the private citizens the 28,000,000 cars they own would serve the war effort or hinder it," it says.

"Whether by putting America on its feet the tempo of our productive capacity would not be slowed down to the definite detriment of our need to keep the wheels of industry, commerce and trade turning at top speed."

The observation is pertinent, and whether those proposing to seize the cars appreciate it is a question, but if they have not it is something for them to consider. The point comes back to one this newspaper has frequently made, which is gaining greater realization and which is that our civil economy must be kept strong enough to carry on the military economy.

The philosopher who wrote that fame was a fleeting thing must have been thinking about those star major league pitchers who are getting shellacked regularly.

Nearly half of Nippon's soldiers, we read, wear spectacles. Well, this is one time when hitting a guy wearing glasses isn't going to be against the law.

Milly, the titan-tressed typewriter tapper, thinks poker players must naturally be kind to animals. They are always feeding the kitty.

Hitler, we read, now plans to launch a "peace offensive." No matter what that guy does—it's offensive.

Who'd ever thought we'd live to see the day when World War I looked strictly minor league?

Small Boy Asleep

By MARSHALL MASLIN

There he lies in his small bed. That sleeping youngster whose years are so few. His face is clean, his teeth have been brushed. He'd had his bath and has gone off to sleep. How angelic he looks there. Butter wouldn't melt in his mouth. That small, impetuous, too lively lad!

You tiptoed in on an errand to his room. Turned on the light carefully so as not to wake him. Don't worry, thunder and lightning and air raid sirens wouldn't get him awake. He's fast asleep. Bend over and look at him. His breath comes so lightly.

The fact is, whether true or untrue, they should not make the slightest difference to us in our war purpose. They cannot be helpful, so we should neither believe nor disbelieve them, but just refuse to accept them until they have backed.

You feel protective toward that sleeping boy. You wonder if you're too harsh with him. You gave him a scoldin just before he went to bed. He broke a street light today and didn't come straight home from school. He told his mother he wouldn't mind. He said, "YOU'RE not my boss." He was impudent and he had something coming to him, all right. We can't let him become a "Problem" . . . That's what you thought—just before he went to bed.

But he looks so angelic now. Perhaps he is a noisy, impetuous, full-of-spirits, into-everything child when he's awake and look so gentle when he's asleep? Don't let him fool you. He's just a Regular Boy and he'll get away with what he can. Don't worry as long as he tells the truth and isn't cruel to his dog and doesn't tell tales or try to shift the blame when he's at fault and doesn't whine when he's hurt. He'll be all right.

Turn out the light and tip-toe out. You never had an angel in your family yet and HE isn't one either. And you wouldn't know how to raise one if you had one.

Rumors Coming From Europe Do Not Hold Water

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON May 18—A plague of rumors is flying out of Europe. Typical is the one that Hitler has banished Goering, who is going to Lisbon with Count Ciano to negotiate a peace through the British ambassador there.

This unbacked tale has many ramifications, one that the Italian ambassador in Spain has been whispering sweet sell-out terms on the side to the British diplomat, Sir Samuel Hoare, at the instance of King Victor Emmanuel, who is supposed to be plotting a coup to depose Mussolini.

Now no one knows where these stories come from. They generally appear in print as radio reports reaching Moscow or London from Berne or Istanbul. Never is any authority given. Usually London and Moscow pass them along with smiling doubt, as if to say:

"We don't believe them, either, but there might be something in them."

The only thing similar about all these tales is their purpose. They all create an impression that the Axis is wobbling on its last legs. Without a single exception they all serve to sponsor the notion that the end of the war is near and therefore, they imply that foes of the Axis need not break their necks hurrying their production or hastening to the battlefield.

Undermining Objective

That is enough to make anyone cast them aside immediately, with the suspicion that they are Nazi propaganda designed solely to undermine our war effort.

Take that rumor about Goering and Ciano going to Lisbon. There are fairly good grounds for believing Goering's influence has truly declined since his air force lost the Battle of Britain, and that Hitler has edged him out of his position as official heir apparent to der Mueller.

Goering is primarily an army man and flier while Himmler, as head of the secret police, has control of politics in the Nazi party.

But if Goering is out, as the rumors say, he could not go to Lisbon as an emissary of the German government, or in fact, of anyone except himself. He would merely be another Hess. The rumor, therefore, does not even carry its own weight.

The Nazi scheme of propaganda has always included the circulation of sly self-defeating rumors to lull their foes into the false sense of security.

In Two Categories

Clever Nazi attacks on the psychological front have always been divided into two categories:

(1) For home consumption, (2) for foreign effect.

Goebels customarily tells the home folks all is well with the world conquest and passes to outside nations such familiar stories as the one that Hitler wants no more territory, that he would not attack Russia, Czechoslovakia, Austria; that the Maginot Line was impregnable—adding a little contrary confusion now and then to top speed."

The observation is pertinent, and whether those proposing to seize the cars appreciate it is a question, but if they have not it is something for them to consider. The point comes back to one this newspaper has frequently made, which is gaining greater realization and which is that our civil economy must be kept strong enough to carry on the military economy.

WOULDN'T THAT BE ATTEMPTING TO IMPROVE ON NATURE?

Sullivan Finds Lessons for Americans In Setting Pheasant and Farm Gadgets

By MARK SULLIVAN

AVONDALE, Chester Co., Pa.—Repeating upon deprivation, I glanced, with some annoyance, at the closed garage door, and started for the village afoot. I took a bee-line course, by what had been, when I was a boy, a path across fields, trodden bare through use a dozen times a day, by ourselves and neighbor families—the boys, in summer, barefoot. But today the path is distinguished by a long, disused and grass-grown, since going to the village became a matter of jumping into the automobile, with no more use of feet than pressing the gas pedal. Crossing a field, its fresh May green suffused with the yellow of buttercups. I turned from the path a few yards to look for a pheasant's nest, I had been told of it by some of the folks on the farm, whose eyes are sharp for the ways of our wild life. Pausing some fifteen feet from the spot they had directed me to, I peered for some minutes before I was able to glimpse the pheasant's bright eyes and especially its coloration, the white, pale, yellowish, a few inches above the ground. Backing away a little, I watched her, and forgot our human anxieties—in reflecting upon the constant wariness against danger, the unending exercise of intelligence and resourcefulness, which that pheasant must practice in behalf of herself and the brood she was hatching into the world. Making her nest, in every detail of location and surroundings, she had had in mind danger, and protection against it.

Maybe this is the Hitler drive on the propaganda front that Vice President Wallace was predicting a few weeks back.

The fact is, whether true or untrue, they should not make the slightest difference to us in our war purpose. They cannot be helpful, so we should neither believe nor disbelieve them, but just refuse to accept them until they have backed.

A human, having the purpose this pheasant had, but less endowed with instinct and experience, might have sought safety in isolation, seclusion, and could have found it in a deep woods nearby. But the pheasant, balancing the safety of seclusion against its perils, seeking a mean between seclusion and the open, had made her nest on the edge of a grass field, where the field abuts upon a country road.

Within a dozen feet of the nest, automobiles pass every hour or so. But the pheasant knows the autos pass, they do not stop. While she knows man as a peril, a deadly one when the hunting season opens in November, she has observed also that man in an automobile does not shoot a gun.

Moreover, in the delicate balancing of considerations which determined that spot, she matched the human danger against other ones. She knew that if nearness to man upon a frequented road is a danger, it is also a protection against other enemies, whose menace is to her eggs and young. Daytime marauders, the crow and hawk, guiltily conscious of their crimes against the farmer's crops and chicken yard, are too wary of man to light upon a roadside fence. Night prowlers—possums, raccoons and skunks—are usually denizens of woods, more likely to do their hunting there than along the roadside.

Other Advantages

As with location, so with surroundings. A casual passer-by would not notice that there are any particular surroundings, hence would not pause to look. But the pheasant

CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR

TIBBY WONDERED if Marg realized that in her confession she had not mentioned the name of the man with whom she was in love. Not that that was necessary, for Tibby felt certain, with a sinking heart, that it could not be anyone except Captain Mercer.

Marg had said that, although she had known she thought about this man more than she should, and hoped that he thought about her, neither had admitted it until the night of the crack-up, when, as she expressed it, their love had "come out into the open."

"We both fought it," Marg said now, still not naming the man, "but when we both realized it might be the end of everything, how near, at least, we had come to it, there didn't seem any sense in fighting it any longer. There's no sense at all, I guess, when it comes to love," she finished miserably.

This was practically the same question that Tibby had reached about love. There did not seem to be any sense to it. It seemed so cruel that Marg's happiness must be so short-lived a second time, so that she must be hurt again. Of course she was bound to be hurt. Captain Mercer, as Steena had pointed out, already had a wife and so was not free. The first man with whom Marg had fallen in love had married someone else. "You see," Marg said, painful color spreading over her face, but her eyes still honest and direct, "he's already married. I know that's no excuse for him, or for me. We both knew that he wasn't free."

It was like Marg not to try to excuse herself. Tibby admired her for that. She said, "Maybe he will be—someday." In her heart, however, she did not believe that could be the solution.

Marg seemed not to believe that either. "No," she shook her head, "that's out. His wife wouldn't agree to divorce, if I were willing for him to do such a thing, which I'm not. I don't relish the role of home wrecker. It hardly becomes me," she added. "I guess, from all I hear, that this home was wrecked before I stepped into the picture."

Tibby had heard, too, that Captain Mercer and his wife did not get on well together. Mrs. Mercer was said to be a shallow, selfish sort of person; there were no children to make the ties a real home needed. Tibby agreed that Marg was hardly a home wrecker, having been hurt herself by another woman, she would not want to hurt someone else, but if Mrs. Mercer did not love her husband, maybe she would not be hurt.

Oh, it was all so mixed up—not a "pretty story," as Marg had said. No triangle ever was, Tibby decided. It was not a new one, as Marg had commented, in telling about the doctor who had jilted her, but it had been new to her, as now it was new again—and therefore it was important to the people concerned. It was new in that they would have to find how they could meet an old situation, bravely, wisely—the way it would have to be met for each individual.

"I don't know what to do," Marg said, as many women must have said before her. "I know it's wrong—and yet to me, because it's so wonderful, it's right, too. I know I should go away while I am strong enough, to run from trouble. I would be weak. I suppose I ought to be ashamed, but I am proud to have won the love of a man so fine and to give him the life I can in return."

Tibby wished there were something she could say to help her. She was glad she had told Marg that she always would be proud of her, was proud of her now, although she might, in the eyes of the world, have done a foolish thing, broken the rules, as Steena had phrased it, but Marg had not meant to break them. Maybe there were other rules, not man-made. Maybe there would be some solution, unforeseen.

Tibby tried to say something of this for comfort. "You will know what is best to do when the time comes," she told her friend. "Maybe there is no right and wrong—like black and white—not straight line between weakness and strength. Each of us only can do what seems best and right for him. I know that you will do that, Marg. You're so fine yourself, so good."

Marg shook her head; tears filled her eyes. She was comforted to have a friend who believed in her. She bit her lips fiercely, however, for she knew that tears did not help, although these were not of self pity, but from gratitude toward Tibby. Even one's friends did not always possess such rare understanding or such loyalty. Marg would try to live up to them.

After that talk, Tibby was impressed by the loyalty Marg had shown, for she still had not revealed the name of the man. She may have guessed, of course, that Tibby knew, but it was rather fine of Marg not to say who it was. For Tibby felt that the biggest share of blame rested on the man's shoulders. He was the one who was not free, he must know that his love could not bring Marg any happiness. He should have been the one to have the most strength by not having been weak enough, even under the stress of impending death, to have betrayed his feelings for Marg, to allow her to betray him.

Maybe she was judging Captain Mercer too harshly. If he was as fine a man as Marg felt him to be, the world would do what was right, too. Though that might mean even Tibby wished there were something she could say to help her. She was glad she had told Marg that she always would be proud of her, was proud of her now, although she might, in the eyes of the world, have done a foolish thing, broken the rules, as Steena had phrased it, but Marg had not meant to break them. Maybe there were other rules, not man-made. Maybe there would be some solution, unforeseen.

Tibby tried to say something of this for comfort. "You will know what is best to do when the time comes," she told her friend. "Maybe there is no right and wrong—like black and white—not straight line between weakness and strength. Each of us only can do what seems best and right for him. I know that you will do that, Marg. You're so fine yourself, so good."

Marg shook her head; tears filled her eyes. She was comforted to have a friend who believed in her. She bit her lips fiercely, however, for she knew that tears did not help, although these were not of self pity, but from gratitude toward Tibby. Even one's friends did not always possess such rare understanding or such loyalty. Marg would try to live up to them.

After that talk, Tibby was impressed by the loyalty Marg had shown, for she still had not revealed the name of the man. She may have guessed, of course, that Tibby knew, but it was rather fine of Marg not to say who it was. For Tibby felt that the biggest share of blame rested on the man's shoulders. He was the one who was not free, he must know that his love could not bring Marg any happiness. He should have been the one to have the most strength by not having been weak enough, even under the stress of impending death, to have betrayed his feelings for Marg, to allow her to betray him.

Marg seemed not to believe that either. "No," she shook her head, "that's out. His wife wouldn't agree to divorce, if I were willing for him to do such a thing, which I'm not. I don't relish the role of home wrecker. It hardly becomes me," she added. "I guess, from all I hear, that this home was wrecked before I stepped into the picture."

It was like Marg not to try to excuse herself. Tibby admired her for that. She said, "Maybe he will be—someday." In her heart, however, she did not believe that could be the solution.

Oh, it was all so mixed up—not a "pretty story," as Marg had said. No triangle ever was, Tibby decided. It was not a new one, as Marg had commented, in telling about the doctor who had jilted her, but it had been new to her, as now it was new again—and therefore it was important to the people concerned. It was new in that they would have to find how they could meet an old situation, bravely, wisely—the way it would have to be met for each individual.

"I don't know what to do," Marg said, as many women must have said before her. "I know it's wrong—and yet to me, because it's so wonderful, it's right, too. I know I should go away while I am strong enough, to run from trouble. I would be weak. I suppose I ought to be ashamed, but I am proud to have won the love of a man so fine and to give him the life I can in return."

Dean Holds Former Mates to Six Hits for His Third Victory

CLEVELAND, May 18 (P)—The Cleveland Indians today slammed their way through to further service in the air in the United States Air Corps.

A Matty-Baker Story

Here is a story typical of the older Matty:

In the Giants-Athletics world series of 1911 Mathewson was working against Jack Coombs. The game was tied up at 1 to 1 in the second inning when Frank Baker drove one over the wall. It was largely through this round-tripper that Baker was labelled Home-run Baker.

The count was two and two at the time. Matty's next pitch was called a ball. He made a slight protest, but nothing more. Then at three and two, Baker broke up the game.

Chubby Dean held his former teammates to six hits to chalk up his third victory although he granted nine bases on balls.

Kenny Keltner rapped a single, a double and a triple in five times at bat and drove in two runs. Les Fleming had a perfect day with a double and two singles in three trips.

The Tribesmen kept chipping away at Herman Besse and Fred Calligari, who relieved him in the fourth inning.

The Athletics took the lead for the first and last time in the second by scoring twice on two walks, a single and an error.

In the next inning Dean's single, Keltner's double, and Heath's triple scored two runs. The Redskins picked up another run in the fourth and singles by Heath, Keltner, and Denning and Fleming's double accounted for three runs in the fifth to set up the ball game. The box score:

Dodgers Boost Lead by Blasting Cubs 4-1

Brooklyn Crew Scores Seventh Straight Victory

Clyde McCullough's Homer Keeps Johnny Allen from Shutout

BROOKLYN, May 18 (AP) — The Brooklyn Dodgers boosted their National League lead to seven full games today with their seventh straight conquest, a 4 to 1 triumph over the Chicago Cubs.

Johnny Allen, the veteran right-hander, pitched five-hit ball and would have had a shutout except for a home run by Catcher Clyde McCullough after two were out in the ninth inning.

The National League champions scored all their runs with timely hits off Jake Mooty, two of them coming on a pair of doubles by Arky Vaughan.

Brooklyn put the game out of reach with two runs in the sixth. Mickey Owen started this thrust with a single, stole second and scored on a double by Reese. After Allen popped up, Reese took a taunting lead off second, drawing a wild throw from Mooty and enabling the little shortstop not only to steal third but to race on home.

The Dodgers also pulled a double deal with Pete Reiser and Dolph Camilli in the third.

Claude Passeau was banished from the Cubs' bench during the fourth inning by Umpire Bill Stewart, who evidently objected to the jockeying by the Chicago pitcher.

CHICAGO, May 18 (AP) — Outfielder Wally Moses lifted the Chicago White Sox out of the cellar for the first time in more than three weeks today by slapping a Homer with one on and two out in the ninth to give the Chicagoans a seventh straight victory and sweep the three-game series from the Washington Senators, 7 to 5.

The blow off Reliever Bill Zubor, jumped the Sox over the Philadelphia Athletics into a tie for sixth place with the Senators.

Moses previously had driven in two runs off Rookie Hardin Cathay, who started but who was removed in the fifth when the Sox scored three runs for a 5-3 lead. The box score:

Cumberland Tax Levy for 1942-43 Totals $655,130

Rate Will Remain at $1.10; Pay Boosts Granted "for the Duration"

Two ordinances — one providing for the annual appropriations and the other providing for the tax levy for the fiscal year, April 1, 1942 to March 31, 1943 — were approved yesterday at a meeting of the mayor and city council.

The city tax rate remains at $1.10 for each $100 worth of assessable property and appropriations approved total $655,130, an increase of $46,500 above the $606,530 for the fiscal year of 1941-42. The increase is covered by additional taxable property.

How Levy Is Apportioned

The levy for 1942-1943 is apportioned as follows:

Real estate, $42,400,000; personal, $1,500,000; corporations, $4,000,000; $1,600,000; corporations, $4,000,000; total, $49,300,000 at $1.10 will net $542,300.

Bank stock, $5,000; corporation franchise, $1,400; total, $548,700.

Other income includes: Allegany county, $7,630; general licenses, $19,000; general and special income, $21,000; interest on taxes, $9,000; permits, $1,800; police fines, $6,000; weights, $4,000; state income tax, $8,000; surplus, 1941-42, $30,900; total, $106,430; total levy for year, $655,130.

What Individuals Pay

Nineteen and thirty-seven one hundredths cents is levied upon every $100 worth of property to be applied to the payment of interest of the bonded debt.

Twenty and fifty-seven one hundredths cents is levied upon every $100 worth of property to be applied to the payment of the General Improvement Bonds of 1929, the Flood Prevention Bonds of 1927, the Flood Bonds of 1934, the Flood Bonds of 1936, and Emergency Serial Bonds of 1938, which fall due during the fiscal year.

Five and forty-six one hundredths cents is levied upon every $100 worth of property, the proceeds to be applied to and paid to the trustees of the sinking fund for the purposes of redeeming the General Bonded Indebtedness for the fiscal year.

The sum of seventy-two and sixty-one hundredths cents is levied upon each $100 worth of property, to be applied to the payment of current expenses and general purposes; and the sum of forty-three and nine-tenths cents is levied upon each $100 of bank stock in the City of Cumberland, to be applied to the payment of current expenses for the fiscal year.

Pay Increases Given

Pay increases were granted to employees of the street and water departments, four janitors and Charles F. Ridge, assistant tax collector, but boosts in pay sought by firemen, employees of the engineering and health department were denied by the council.

Street and water department employees were boosted five cents an hour, janitors received increases from $90 to $100 a month and Burke's salary was upped from $125 to $175 monthly. While the increases will become effective on June 1, it was pointed out that they will be in effect only for the duration of the war.

It was announced by James Orr, police and fire commissioner, that members of the police department will have to pay one-half the cost of new uniforms. The police appropriation was hiked $3,000 over last year to provide for the addition of new officers and the appropriation of the fire department was increased $5,500, of which $3,000 will be used for the expense of reconditioning a fire truck.

No Boost for Library

The library appropriation remains at $10,000 in spite of efforts by the board to have it boosted to $12,000. However, Arthur E. Gibson, city auditor, was instructed to advise library officials that $500 additional will be taken from the contingent fund to defray expenses of moving equipment to the adjacent building vacated by the welfare board.

Appropriations for Year

Appropriations for the fiscal year beginning April 1, 1942, and ending March 31, 1943, and the amount of increase over last year is indicated in the following tabulation:

Democrats Begin Drive for $1,500 To Eliminate Debt

Mrs. Mary Jones Is Named Committee Head of Women's Group

Mrs. Mary Jones was appointed chairman of the Women's committee of the Allegany county Democratic party last night for the purpose of raising a $1,500 fund which was assigned to this county as its quota towards the Democratic National Committee's drive to eliminate the party debt.

Other members of the committee are Mrs. Nora Fleming, Mrs. R. M. Wasy, Mrs. Minna Edmunds, Mrs. Paul Stein, Mrs. Anna K. Reed, Mrs. Nellie Deneen, Mrs. Zeida Burns, Mrs. Lucille McGeady, Mrs. Elizabeth McLean, Mrs. Anna McCleary, Miss Rose Kreigbaum, Mrs. Mary A. Heckler, Mrs. Sylvia G. Mattingly.

Mrs. Rachel Garner, Mrs. Felicia McCreary, Mrs. Nora Fochman, Mrs. Clara Caffey, Mrs. Nora Jolley, Mrs. Edward F. Mullan, Mrs. Margaret McKenzie, and Miss Nellie Keane.

Attorney General William C. Walsh outlined the necessity of this county raising its share of the fund and then urged the women present to conduct the coming election campaign in such a manner that no bitterness will be caused. This is in the interest of national unity, he said.

"While Democrats may differ on political questions with Republicans and oppose them in elections there is no need to get bitter," Walsh declared. "We all must work for the good of the country and not get involved in bitterness during the coming campaign," Walsh continued, "so that all of us are united, regardless of political differences, to win this war."

John J. McMullen, chairman for the fund raising campaign, told the women that the $1,500 represented about seven cents for each registered Democrat in Allegany county and should not be too hard to raise.

McMullen said a committee would be appointed later to solicit various officeholders.

Cards Are Available For Homes with Men in Armed Forces

Charles K. Dyche, chairman of the service flag committee, Veterans of Foreign Wars, states while the number of requests for flags has been good, the percentage in this section has been low. No matter if the family of the man in service lives in Maryland, Pennsylvania or West Virginia, Henry Hart Post will forward the request to national headquarters, Kansas City, Mo., which provides the cards.

While requests for two cards are not unusual, there are a number listing three members of the family in the service. So far five mothers have reported this number. The only request for four stars was received from Mrs. Fred Raymond, Meyersdale, Pa. She had been awarded a medal for her contribution of sons to the armed service.

Henry Hart Post wants to have one or more of these cards hung in the home of every man called to the service. There is no cost for the service cards, and Henry Hart Post considers it a duty as well as a pleasure to obtain same.

Alumni Orchestra Will Give Second Concert of Season

Platt Will Direct Program at Allegany High School Tonight

The Cumberland Alumni Orchestra, sponsored by the Rotary club, will present its second concert of the season this evening at 8:30 o'clock in the Allegany high school auditorium.

Young repeated that the management in an effort to avoid a threatened strike, agreed to operate at a loss until July 1 in order to pay seven cents an hour, the increase to automatically adjust itself July 1 in step with whatever concession the Office of Price Administration might make in favor of lifting the ceiling on laundry services for the two laundries. And if no boost in ceiling prices should be granted then wages were to revert to the old scale, Mr. Young said.

In the May 8 to July 1 interval, Young said, it would cost the two laundries approximately $5,500 to meet the seven cents increase. To reopen negotiations July 1 in order to make an adjustment on wages based on a scale entailing operation of the laundries at a loss, he said, was not his understanding of any agreement arrived at.

The only question concerned in the dispute, Mr. Glenn's statement says, is: "Why did the laundry managers refuse to sign the contract they had agreed to in the presence of a state and federal controller?"

No admission will be charged but a silver offering will be taken.

Young's statement is that the laundry managers never concurred to the type of agreement that Glenn describes.

He was treated at Allegany hospital and taken home.

A request that farmers file their labor requirements with the State Employment agency in Cumberland was made yesterday by R. F. McHenry.

McHenry pointed out that because of the war, labor is scarce and few men are available to work on farms, thus creating a problem for the farmer.

If a farmer is now in need of help or is likely to need assistance, he should file an estimate of his requirements with the employment agency, McHenry said.

The agency, he explained, serves as a clearing house for unemployed persons and labor requests, but added that the idle cannot be taken off relief roles unless applications for assistance are made.
